An Act for legislative purposes includes any amendment which has the potential to significantly affect the effectiveness of the original Act. Any such amendment is subject to the following procedure: (i) The legislation (a) is treated as any other Act (b) is treated as Part II of the Statutory Rules 1999 as amended from time to time. (c) is treated as Part II of the Statutory Rules 1999 as amended from time to time and the General Index. (d) The affected parliamentary business was for the Government to consider the following options: (i) The Government should impose a default ban on the use of push buttons on the manufacture of electrical equipment such as household appliances. (ii) The Government should give the responsible department the power to decide when it is appropriate to take steps to impose a default ban on the use of push buttons on the manufacture of electrical equipment. (iii) The Government should include a mandatory requirement on the production of electrical equipment requiring the use of push buttons to be included in the Consumer Guarantees Act if the Consumers Commissioner decides that the default ban should be imposed. (iv) The Government should not impose a default ban on the use of push buttons on the manufacture of electrical equipment. (v) The Government should not impose a default ban on the use of push buttons on the manufacture of electrical equipment. No options have been nominated. (b) Result of Options Paper The Consumer Guarantees Act 1999 provides that if the Government does not pass legislation in response to the Options Paper, the Consumers Commissioner, after considering the responses to the Options Paper, is to determine which of the options is the most appropriate for the purposes of the Act. The Act of Parliament was approved with a majority of two to one and came into effect on 13th April 2001. It has had a very minor effect on the f678ea9f9e
